Experience.—We live and learn; but we do not live and remember.—We make but little practical use of the reasonings either of others or surveyers. Our minds vary, but seldom radically improve. Our willingness to be warned by the experience of others is not surprising; but that we should forget, or be blind to our own experience is the most strange.

STEEL PENS.

Steel Pens tre now in almost universal use, and yet probably few persons, except the manufacturers and those they employ, know any thing of the way in which these instruments are made. Alderson's treatise gives the modus operandi:

"In the first place, flat sections of steel are cut out, of the shape required, by a stamping press; they are then placed under another press-which pierces the holes and cuts the slitts and they are then they are then placed under another press-which pierces the holes and cuts the slitts and they are then struck lifter their convex shape by a third press.

"They have then to be polished and tompered, which is managed in a peculiar apparatus, called, emphatically," the Devil," consisting of a fly wheel and a box, in which the pens are placed, and to which a motion is given, resembling that "skibleted in shaking materials together in a beg.
