SERIOUS ACCIDENT AND LOSS OF LIFE.

THE locomotive and tender of the Express train from the Chicago & North Western railroad, on the morning of the 4th inst., from Baltimore to Philadelphia, came in collision at nine o'clock on the evening of the 4th inst., about four miles to the westward of Havre-de-Grace. So violent was the collision, that the locomotive was dashed to pieces, several of the cars totally demolished, one man killed on the spot, and two dangerously wounded, and a number of others more or less injured.

As one of the trains contained about 175 passengers, and the other about 20, the loss of life should have been so inconsiderable.

According to a report from a committee appointed at a meeting of the passengers, to inquire into the causes of the collision, the result of gross and highly culpable negligence on the part of the directors of the company, and the want of proper precautions on the part of the conductors, was as well as their "omission to provide the necessary engine cars in the rear."

The committee also reported that the company was "highly dangerous to human life," and we presume, from the tone of the resolutions adopted by the company, will be required to answer the charges brought against them at the bar of public justice.

The Stars and Stripes.—We have seen some speculations lately about the origin of the flag of the United States. The present flag, as we are reminded by an article in an old volume of Niles' Register, was adopted by the act of Congress passed the 4th of April, 1818. This provided that the flag should be thirteen stripes of alternate red and white, to represent the original thirteen States; and the union should be composed of twenty stars, white, in a blue field. The union did not provide that a star should be added to the union upon the admission of every new State.

It was from the same act that the act of Congress passed the 14th of July, 1777. This act provided such a flag as we have at present, but did not contemplate any alteration in case of the admission of the States. By an act passed in January, 1794, the stars and stripes were both directed to be fifteen in number, and the Union flag was the result.

The next alteration was that made by the act of 1818, which gave justice to the old thirteen, and added a star to the constellation so often as a new State comes into the confederacy. [N. O. Picture.]

CRED OF WESTERN NEW YORK

The Boston Morning Chronicle thus sums up the creed of Western New York: "It is a perfect right of every man to be free, and to be as good as any other man."

1. Something that can be done as well as others.

2. What man has done, man can do.

3. What is every body's business, is my business.

4. The time to begin a good work is now.

5. If you want a thing done, do it if it talk about the duty of doing it.

In one of the counties of Ohio, there lived a family by the name of G—. Their eldest daughter was a beautiful blooming girl of 19, in the fall of 1824 she was seduced by a young man of twenty, who was the son of a poor farmer. The seduction was by nature of warm affections, and being raised and educated in the society of Miss Mary C. G—, she was a sincere lover of this innocent and lovely girl. Nor were his affections bestowed in vain; for Miss Mary duly appreciated his worth, and returned his affection. By mutual consent, they were married to spend a few weeks with her. At the expiration of two weeks she returned to her father's house after confiding a year or two she started again to spend another week with Mr. G—. She passed the firm and mills of Mr. G—. David forced her over the strong, and taking his rifle, he went with her, perhaps a mile towards Mr. K's farm, and there took her towards the woods to the ferry and acrossed. He was bloody, and Hannah asked him the cause. He replied that he had shot a turkey and carried it home, but meeting a stranger that was moving, he had shot or given him the turkey. This was Monday, the nine days afterwards, Mrs. G— came to see her sister, and enquired for Mary; stating that she had not been at home for nine days. The alarm was raised, and search made, and enquired for Mary; stating that she had not been at home for nine days. The alarm was raised, and search made, and enquired for Mary; stating that she had not been at home for nine days.

The body was taken to Mr. K's and all were required to come forward and touch the body. This, my brother and several others agreed to do. The purpose of witnessing any change that might be visible in the countenance of the assembled multitude, but under the pretext of an old superstition notion, that the murder would be avenged, the corpse of one whom he had murdered that the wounds would bleed afresh. All came forward and touched her body except David C. whose feelings would not permit him to come near her. Excitement was great, and his refusal to touch her, and his having been seen last with her in that direction and coming home all bloody, was construed into his supposes guilt, and on suspicion poor David was thrown into prison to await the result of the alleged murder of Mary G—. Decayed were the hours that passed over him while confined in the dark dungeon of a loathsome jail. But conscious innocence kept him high, and he trusted that God would do the affair that innocence would one day be known, and fully brought to light after the body of Miss G— had been interred six days. The next day, perhaps murder was committed upon her to commit another crime. Her body was disinterred, and a competent jury called to examine and report upon this matter, and their decision was as suggested. Public excitement rose to a high pitch, and the community believing that David C. was truly the murderer, and spoiler of innocence that serious apprehensions were entertained that the jail would be forced and the prisoner released. At 11 o'clock every circumstantial evidence was made to bear against him, and it seemed that David C. must be sacrificed to appease the wrath of an incensed multitude. Aids could be employed for the prisoner, and after investigation David C. was acquitted from legal arrest, but from popular sentiment. He was hunted down, and persecuted where ever he went, and life became burthenome to him. The hapless victim, however, his father's family departed, and never shall I forget the sad change was visible with them, when in 1828 I again saw them; for I had left that section of country only a few months before the sad tragedy. In 1829, Mr. C. was once more in Illinois. The next year Mr. A. again called a woman in the remote part of the settlement, and to accomplish his selfish designs, he threatened her life; and told her that he would kill her. Mary G— for similar obstacles. He also made her promise total secrecy, and she escaped with life. She immediately made out before a justice of the peace, and he was arrested. His mother-in-law and two of his wife's sisters divulged his conduct towards herself, and such was the strong testimony against him that he was duly committed for trial at the next court. He broke jail and fled, and the excellent justice of the peace shifted for themselves be departed for the west. The public now looked back with feelings of the deepest regret for their cruel treatment of poor David C. By this time, which had transpired that all were thoroughly convinced of the innocence of C. and the guilt of A. This wretched man had only been married about one year when he murdered Mary G—.

her father's body, but none could discern any change upon his features. After coming to the west he was engaged with counterfeiters and desperadoes and being afterwards accused of murder and found guilty, he was hanged, and thus the earth was rid of the monster. In 1824 he was sunk to the grave broken hearted. In passing through the section of country where the murder was committed I went to look at the spot, and there upon a bench tree I saw a small cut in the bark these words: "Here Mary G— was murdered by David C. Nov. 19th 1824." But how much were the community devoted as to the murderer! The wretch who was guilty, was the worst subject of his crimes, wrecked upon an innocent and worthy young man. Mary G— and David C. now lie low in death. I leave to their memory. This is a plain narrative of facts, and the parties concerned were all well known to the writer. I have not embellished; for my feelings, on this mournful occasion would not permit me to do so. N. C.

A selfish, stingy, and narrow spirit, who we care for none but ourselves, and regard not how it fares with other men, we do but live in ease and plenty; our lives, is of all things most contrary to the will of God. I have not, and do not earnestly recommend to any; for it is not mercenary or self-seeking, it inclines us to do good to others though we do not receive the least advantage to ourselves. Besides the pleasure of doing it, if our hearts be full of true charity, it will never suffer us to be in quiet till we give it some vent, and will make us impatiently seek for opportunity of exercising it; so far is it from producing gain or profit to itself, that kindness of death to others, that it is beneficial to the evil and unthankful, to the indigent, and those who are unable to make any requital; it again leads us to do good to others, who return evil for it, so far is it from any base or selfish designs. [Dr. Calcutt's Sermons.]

Sterre Leone.—Accounts received at Salem, Mass. from this place up to the 7th of March, state that hostilities had occurred between the British and the natives. The river Niger was blockaded by a British sloop, and the British sloop, to bring Starling King of the Latona, to the Niger. The Nalogs, in an armed canoe, broke through the blockade. It was pursued and driven ashore, and the day after the Kassababouly was battered down; but in an attempt to land, it was fired on by the British, and was driven back. A reinforcement was sent for from Sterre Leone. On the 11th a severe battle was fought, the Landnams having joined the Nalogs. The Nalogs were defeated and their boats burned down. The river was opened on the 12th.

Fire in Manchester.—It is stated, that a most destructive fire occurred at Manchester March 2. The amount of property destroyed is believed to be more than £100,000.

Three thousand pounds were recently collected in Glasgow in one day, for the great leprosy fund.
