estimation, and those, too, who have most brilliantly shone in these arts have in such instances been endowed with such natural powers that they have in a manner subdued all opposing circumstances, and triumphed in the bent of their dispositions. Look for instance over the catalogue of poets and you will soon discover that it was not the education of men alone which made a Shakespeare or a Burns, or amongst painters and sculptors, which made a Michael Angelo or a

And who produces work which none but such a mind as he possesses could perform, and who in his particular vocation stands forth as great as Shakespeare a poet, or Raphael a painter. It is true indeed they are sometimes employed in work which is thought useless, and patronized but by a few, though often their work is useful, but neglected through the too general deficiency of taste and knowledge.

But of all the employments of men, there is none more ennobling than agriculture. Both for peacefulness and simplicity, usefulness and beauty, this pur-

The cultivation of the soil and the production of our food brings us close in contact with nature and with nature's works.

In the various changes of the seasons, in the budding of the leaf in spring and its falling in autumn, the brilliance of the moon and the planets in our system, the gentle showers which hasten vegetation, and the glistening snow which protects the earth, a field of inquiry and thought is ever open to the philosopher.

The painter goes to nature for his art, and all his aim is to imitate her; he pictures to us the evening with the setting sun and deep blue sky, and in the landscape places weary husbandmen retiring homewards, and blighting herds delight-have all these advantages; we can be continually studying cause and effect; we can enjoy all the beauties and varieties of each month of the year; we can breathe the sweet air of summer when the poor are shivering with cold in a crowded factory; we can enjoy the sun when the cold winter's night, when the starry sky is shining brightly over the crowded city, whithering from door to door. The farmer, indeed, should be a truly good man if he is not enjoying so many of nature's bounties. He should be a good man to the birds and the beasts, or he who well arranges his affairs can have much more time for the cultivation of his intellect than many commercial men.

We trust, then, that by properly using his leisure time, the socialist will see the humble tilers of the soil stand yet as high in the estimation of mankind as those more occupied in any other pursuits; and that the farmer will be able to devote to the production of any important necessities of the community at large, shall receive his

THE TROUBLE IN ST. DOMINGO.

Correspondence of N. Y. Express.

AUGUST 24, 1841.

This is the fourth again repeating the horrors of civil war. The Spaniards of the island, so called, have raised the standard of revolt, and the President left Port-au-Prince six weeks since, with an army to quell the insurrection. There had a battle at Avesa, two days' march from the city of San Domingo. They took possession of the town, which was given up to the soldiers for pillage and the inhabitants, men, women and children, to massacre. I saw a letter after the battle stating that the President did not think that the women and children would be massacred but he could not restrain the soldiers.

The French Commandant at San Domingo, hearing this, went to Avesa, it is supposed to quell the difficulties, and re-manded the President to the city. The President, however, insisted that he should not be permitted to return to the city, and that his troops should be permitted to remain. The President, however, insisted that he should not be permitted to return to the city, and that his troops should be permitted to remain. The President, however, insisted that he should not be permitted to return to the city, and that his troops should be permitted to remain.

The blacks in the town of Avesa, taking advantage of the absence of the French, killed the French soldiers, and took possession of the town. A battle was fought between the blacks and the French soldiers on the 31st inst., and the city surrendered on the 4th. The French soldiers were killed, and the city was taken by the blacks. THE OREGON EXPEDITION.

We learn from the Western Explorer printed at Independence, Missouri, that the Oregon emigrants started from their place of general rendezvous at the "Lone Star" on the 14th ult., and that although they had been gone upwards of two weeks, they had, in consequence of heavy water, only travelled about one hundred miles. The Explorer gives the following particulars, which are of general interest:

Major Moses Harris, a native of Union County, South Carolina, is their pilot; and Col. Nathaniel Ford, of Howard county, Mo., is captain of the company. There are several small parties on their route, which have not yet reached Col. Ford's company, embracing in all 27 families, numbering about 125 souls. They also have with them 120 cattle, 100 horses, and 500 sheep. Col. Ford's company there are 51 wagons, 503 head of cattle, 60 horses, and 225 mules.

When all are together, there will be about 61 wagons, 610 head of cattle, 60 horses and 20 mules—quite a number. Col. Ford's company, it is thought, will reach Elgin, Gilman's in about two weeks, the latter having crossed the river near Fort Leavenworth, and are now on the Nishnabot river, waiting on Col. Ford's company.

has a great effect upon the countenance. It is a face of wrinkles of all kinds. A woman lately died at Peoria, over 70 years of age, and it said her face was as smooth and her skin as soft as a young girl's. But she was a quiet, temperate, and careful creature, care never troubled her, and she had never been known to frown. Very indeed.
